Radicals Said to Look Askance at Pan-European Movement Because Business Likes It

Because of the growing interest in the proposal for a United States of Europe, The Christian Science Monitor has arranged for a series of articles on the subject from the pen of a competent observer. The articles cover many phases of the subject and provide the groundwork for an understanding of the reasons for the appearance and power of the whole movement. The fourth article appears below.

GENEVA-European big business welcomes the proposal for a United States of Europe. In fact, European big business is largely responsible for proving to skeptical statesmen that a United States of Europe is an immediate possibility. At the first congress of the Pan-European Union, held three years ago in Vienna, Paul Loebe, then president of the German Reichstag, said: "We maintain that Pan-Europe already exists. Eco-nomic cartels, trusts in iron, steel, coal, wool, cotton, and so forth, are nothing more than a realization of economic Pan-Europeanism by certain groups of capitalists. Now we want to make Pan-Europe not only in an economic sense but in every want to make Pan-Europe not only in an economic sense but in every sense and for us all. Only by this will Europe be saved from catastrone."

where a traffic official of the State said it was found that more than 40 per cent of the automobiles there needed repairs. Fifteen thousand cars the control of the period of footing steer.

In thus referring to the international cartels, Herr Loebe was pointing to the most significant development in Europe's large-scale indus-try since the close of the war. For at the very time when politicians were following policies which involved an intensification of the old divisions of the continent, and when the seeds were being industriously to leave with the defect uncorrected.

Flexible System Is Rejected When Coalition Carries Simmons Amendment-Smoot-Hawley Bill Gets Setback in First Real Test of Strength

WASHINGTON—Disregarding the express recommendation of the President, the Democratic-Progressive coalition in the Senate enacted an amendment to the tariff bill drastically revising the existing flexible tariff system.

The President had urged that the tically revising the existing flexible tariff system.

The President had urged that the present law, vesting in the Executive the power to change tariff duties upon the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, be retained unchanged. The proposal of the opposition would give Congress the decision to act.

The close vote on the issue, 47 to 42, and the length of the contest is indicative of the determined effort that was waged on both sides. The victory adds immeasurably to the position of the opposition. The question was the first real test of strength on the Smoot-Hawley Bill, and it demonstrated that the opposition coalition has the votes to dominate the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate, and that the opposition the situation in the Senate the opposition the situation the situation the situation that the opposition the situation the situation that the situation that the situation the situation that the situation that the situation the situation that th

Dr. Stresemann began to attract international attention when, in August, 1923, he was chosen Chancellor to succeed Wilhelm Cuno. His Reputation Established The German Foreign Minister fur-ther established himself as a states-man of international caliber in March, 1927, when he presided at the meet-ing of the League Council with tact and skill. Affable, approachable and willing to talk, he became a favorite with the newspaper correspondents assigned to the League.

The crowning recognition of his policies of peace and conciliation came in December, 1926, when with M. Briand and Sir Austen Chamberlain, he shared the Nobel Peace Prize for that year.

Socially, Dr. Stresemann was the most active of the German statesmen is time. He entertained generously at his official residence, where he was assisted by his accomplished wife. He was a frequent attendant at the theater, opera, athletic events and political entertainments. In his léisure moments, Dr. Stresemann found diversion in the study of Goethe and Napoleon and his libraries on them were said to be among the best in private possession. His knowledge of these two men and their writings was indicated by the readiness with which he quoted them.

League of Nations Admits Owing Great Debt of Gratitude to Stresemann

BY RADIO 10 THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR GENEVA-In League of Nations circles Dr. Gustav Stresemann was regarded as one of the pillars of the League. He was admired above all for his constancy to the ideals of the League in times of great difficulty for Germany. In spite of the opposition to his policy of reconciling Germany with France, in spite of his disappointment after Locarno when the fruits of that agreement failed to mature in the evacuation of the Rhineland, Dr. Stresemann held undismayed on his course.

The League realizes that it owes a great debt of gratitude to him for his patience and his loyalty. There was hardly a meeting of the Council which he did not attend, remaining as a rule to the end. At every meet ing he gained the esteem of his colleagues and added to his prestige as a wise, far-seeing statesman.

and Sir Austen Chamberlain, even to his critic and some-time opponent August Zaleski. He never stooped to take advantage of the weaknesses of others or yielded to the temptation of playing up to the gallery in his own country.

In a talk which the representative of The Christian Science Monitor had with him Dr. Stresemann spoke most hopefully of the ultimate tri-umph of the League of Nations and looked forward with renewed confi-dence to the reconciliation of former enemies. He could never understand why France and Germany could not be friends, why the bitterness of war should not be forgotten, why a new generation should not grow up which could join hands in the work created the German People's Party.

Presiding over it was no easy task, for, like all other German post-war that war could be banished, if only men would think aright, and he could not be persuaded that this was diverging views. The party was re-difficult, for he had the natural tend-ency to think good of all men. For ency to think good of all men. For this reason he believed in the value of the Kellogg pact.

SEVERAL thousand tire dealers through-out this country proudly hang the LEE of Conshohocken sign over their doors.

They have invested their own money in vulcanizers and other necessary equipment to serve properly their customers, and they carry a stock of LEE of Conshohocken tires and tubes.

These LEE tire dealers, known and respected in their own cities, realize that a good local reputation is their biggest asset. They make truthful statements and stand back of them. They buy LEE tires because no one makes better ones, and because there is no likelihood of LEE opening up a store in their own block either under the LEE name or some other.

They trust us to make better tires -so much better that they can sell them to you, knowing that their good-looking surfaces do not cover up hidden treacheries.

Perhaps some of you patronize the "cashand-carry" tire stores whose seductive low prices are not so low when you figure it out, possibly you service your own tires, and very likely you never tried to secure an adjustment on the basis of the wild guarantees which some so glibly quote in order to get the sale over.

LEE of Conshohocken dealers welcome the opportunity of buying your present tires and sending you on your way with a set of 6 Ply LEE De Luxe or 8 Ply LEE Super De Luxe.

You'll never put money into better tires. Your family and your guests will be safer, ride more comfortably, and go further on these superb tires.

Mrs. Donnelly was a bride and eager to have every thing in the new home as attractive as possible so she went to some trouble to devise a dress which she thought was pretty enough to wear in her kitchen.

Seasoned housewives on the block told her she would soon get over the desire to look well in the kitchen, but instead of that she made some dresses like her own and took them to a Kansas City department store. A little tremulously she called up the store at closing time to see if any

Pulaski Delegation Arrives in New York

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU

NEW YORK-A Polish delegation headed by Count Francis Pulaski has just arrived here to represent the Polish Republic at the ceremonies commemorating the aid given the American colonies 150 years ago by Count Casimir Pulaski. The present Count Pulaski is a descendant of Count Casimir Pulaski's brother, Antonine. Accompanying him are W. Sieroszewski, M. Dykoski and M. Sieplak, the latter a member of the Polish Parliament.

After a visit to Washington, the delegation will go to Savannah, Ga. Commemorating ceremonies will be held there Oct. 9-11. Military services, including the placing of a wreath on Count Pulaski's statue, erected in 1825, will open the observance. Count Francis Pulaski, who is an historian, has been working in Paris as a representative of the Polish Government and the Polish Academy, of which he was one of the organizers, to encourage the study of Polish history. During the World War he was president of the Polish Parliament and was a delegate to the Peace Conference at Versailles.

He has brought to this country some documents which he recently discovered bearing on American co-lonial history and on the activities

How a Certain Lawyer

uses the foremost bank in New England

AS A LAW STUDENT he got tired of explaining exactly where the little college was from which he had graduated. And as a law student he once heard Mr. Justice Holmes say that with patience and industry a lawyer could rise to eminence in any branch of the profession.

He is today an eminent Corporation Lawyer in Boston. He recalls the day when he was admitted to the bar, and when he opened his small checking account with The First National Bank of Boston. "Now," he said, "at least I'll never have to explain where and what that bank is!"

TIS FIRST CASE took him to the bank H —a trusteeship in bankruptcy. A bank officer gave him practical suggestions in liquidating the assets. He did the job well, and presently was appointed receiver for a large going concern.

Once more he sought the bank's business advice, borrowed money on receivers' certificates, made certain changes, and proved that the business could be profitably run. His reputation grew. So did his practice. When he was made trustee of a large estate, he at once employed the large and expert organization of the bank's Trust Department - and saved the estate money.

TODAY his manifold responsibilities 1 and concerns touch all the 18 branches of service the bank offers. He never has undertaken to do for himself a thing the foremost bank in New England can do for him-which is why he has had time to practice law, and why he has gone so far on the path he chose.

His case is actual. It is parallel in principle to the case of every lawyer. No young lawyer who proposes to succeed can really afford to link himself with any bank less competent than the best in his community.

SUBWAY'S ROCK FILLS IN LAND ALONG HUDSON

Acreage Valued in Millions Added to Manhattan-Queens Uses Old Cars

NEW YORK-More than 94 acres of new land, estimated to be worth New York Extends $24,000,000, have been added to crowded Manhattan Island through the constructive use of dirt and rock excavated in building a new subway system, the board of transportation has just announced. Simultaneously cials in the Borough of Queens have made it known that they, too will make new land, using 6000 de-crepit automobiles as a filler in extending the boundaries of an airport.

The majority of Manhattan's new acres lie along the Hudson River be-tween Seventy-Second Street and 155th Street, according to the board of transportation, and will constitute an addition to Riverside Park.

Plans have been announced for landscaping the entire area. Children's playgrounds, aggregating 12 acres in area, will take up part of the 32 acres to be devoted to recreation, while present plans call for the construction of numerous swim-ming pools, an ornamental bandstand and 48 tennis courts to be distributed in groups from Sixty-eighth Street to 119th Street.

Along much of the filled-in water front the land has been raised to a height of 10 feet above tidewater according to the board of transportation, in order to make the work harmonize with the plan to cover the tracks of the New York Central Railroad at this point. Over the top of these tracks, it was said, a motor driveway will be constructed, providing an express highway, to be known as Riverside Drive West.

Not only has this filling-in done away with scores of unsightly shacks and sheds that formerly stood along this jagged water front, the board of transportation stated, but it has saved the city approximately $4,000,-000 in the construction of its subway system. Contractor's, it was said, were able to bid nearly $1 a cubic yard lower on the 4,061,000 cubic yards

The same situation exists in all the industrialized states of Europe. Yet, with great markets like America and Russia practically removed from large-scale penetration by European manufactures, and with vigorous industrial nations like the United States Great Britain and Japan ready to compete for the trade of the remaining undeveloped mar-kets in South America, Africa and Asia, the European captain of industry knows that he is in for a hard fight if he is to capture or hold enough of the world market to maintain a prosperous balance at home

Power Without Limit But Europe's big industrialists do why they should. They know that, option to purchase more than 6000 within the limits of their continent or acres at an average cost of $3.20 an of the colonies owned by European states, there are all the necessary ingredients of modern industrial success. There is power without limit huge deposits of coal and, where this is difficult to use economically, unlimited hydroelectric resources There is iron in enormous quantities. There is oil. These are the basic requirements of the modern industrial state. But in addition to these Europe has, not only other raw materials o immense value, but man-power, engi-neering skill, chemical science, and inventive genius in impressive pro-portions. Regarded as an economic unit Europe, even with Great Britain

> The trouble has been that, up to within the last four years, it has been impossible to regard her as a unit, either economically or in any other fashion. Every one of her 27 states has been a principality by itself, jealously guarding its borders against all its neighbors. The aim has been to make each state a self-supporting, self-contained economic unit by it elf, and the industry of other European states has been treated as an enemy to be destroyed rather than as a possible ally to be encouraged.

> Obviously, it was—and is—impossible to develop European industry to the natural limit of its efficiency while its units were thus cooped up within national boundaries. The man who built a shoe factory in Czechoslovakia, for instance, might install as fine machinery as modern inven-tive skill can supply, might use the latest methods of factory technique and sales distribution, might follow every system that scientific managenent has discovered, yet he could not bring its enterprise to maximum efficiency as long as his market was practically restricted to the 14,000,000 eople of Czechoslovakia, many of whom do not buy more than one pair of shoes in three or four years.

Europe's industrialists have had the slogan of efficiency dinned in their ears for years. As well as they could, they have tried to make their plants efficient. Germany, in particular, rather prided herself on the efficiency of her pre-war industrial organization. But all attempts to push European manufacturing to a gen-eral high level of efficiency have been wasted as long as the Continent has been divided by tariffs into mutually exclusive and competitive areas.

Business Men Learn First It was big business in France and Americans. The two states came out of the war with their bitterness increased rather than assuaged. France had the upper hand. She regarded it as just that Germany—that is, of course, German industry—should be made to bear the major part of the costs of the war. In the years follow ing the armistice, and indeed up until the signing of the pact of Locarno, this led her to one attempt to dis-cipline German industry after an-other, culminating in the invasion of the Ruhr. But that method of going about the restoration of European stability and prosperity simply did not work. France's men of big business, notably M. Loucheur, perceived that it was not working before the politicians did. They determined to try a new method.

The first intimation of the new policy, which involved the abandonment of the old national divisions and rivalries and a union of industrial forces on both sides the Franco-German border, came with the forma-tion of the potash cartel in the spring

The date is interesting, as it shows that French and German men of big business had started to get together as soon as the negotiations at Lo-carno marked the arrival of a new carno marked the arrival of a new attitude between the two nations, and indeed before the League of Nations was ready to vote Germany the Council seat which carried the Locarno pacts into full effect.
Most Americans are, by this time, familiar with what the European has in mind when he speaks of an inter-national cartel. It is, in short, the combining of the various units of an industry into an organization that transcends all political boundaries, and that hold enough of a monopoly in that industry to divide markets, fix prices, and regulate production at a point where all the members can be assured a profit. Such an organization would undoubtedly be pronounced unconstitutional under the Sherman anti-trust law in the United States. But the cartel has provided one principal means whereby European big business has made the amazing recovery from the war which I tried to sketch in a previous

The Potash Industry. The first of these European car-tels to be formed was, as has been said, that in the potash industry. The situation which produced that combination was a simple one, not much different from that which has produced the other cartels. When France regained Alsace, by virtue of the Treaty of Versailles, she came into possession of important potash deposits. But Germany, although she had lost these, had still other de-posits which were capable of large development. And in fact, during the period of unrestricted nationalist competition that followed the peace treaty, the French potash interests and the German potash interests, both already organized in national cartels which between them held a practical world monopoly, set about estroying each other's interests. But in the spring of 1926 the directors of the two groups awoke to the ruinous nature of this policy. The Société Commerciale des Potasses d'Alsace and the Deutsche Kalisyndikat accordingly met at Lugano, agreed to combine their resources, and the first great European cartel came into ments under which all these cartels work. In the case of the potash cartel they are easily summarized, because there were only two main parties to the negotiations. It was decided that undisturbed in Germany. But since the German interests were producing not despair. Nor is there any reason on a much larger scale than the it is true that one portion of the op-why they should. They know that, divided, giving the Germans approxitwo-thirds and the French one-third. However, an arrangement for a sliding apportionment was made, whereby any future change in the relative output of the two groups would automatically lead to a readmarket. And potash prices were fixed. Genesis of International Cartel

That is the way an international words of Herr Loebe, economic Pan-Europeanism already realized. For in the wake of the potash cartel there have come about 15 or 20 more of these international organizations, most of them with their principal. there have come about 15 or 20 more of these international organizations, most of them with their principal plants in Germany and France, but also reaching out into Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Rumania, dealt with the cartels first of all belend and alsowhere Indeed there cause it has been their success that are reported to be American interests involved in several of the cartels, those in zinc, steel rails, tubes and been the scene of industrial conflic this year, are controlled by the artificial silk cartel through its larges German member. The principal cartels are in steel, wire, zinc, lead potash, tin, artificial silk, enameled wares, steel rails, glue, electric lamps, mirrors, thread, ammonium sulphate, glass bottles, aluminum, ex olosives and copper. It is obvious that no combination of European interests can obtain even a major portion of the production let alone a monopoly, in several of these items. But a monopoly is not necessary to make a cartel a success. A general access to the ma terials and markets of all of Europe is enough, European big business has found, to insure profitable operation. Thus the steel cartel, which is the most important of them all, because it is able, by its ramifications into all parts of the continent where steel is produced, to surmount tariff difficulties, despite its lack of a monopoly, has established its position as one of the most formidable industrial combines on earth. Such a cartel is able, not only to view the threat of American competition with composure, but to enter the struggle for other world markets which America covets, having at least an even chance of victory

Why Not Go Farther?

Naturally, in view of the success of the cartels, the proponents of a United States of Europe say: "Why not apply the idea farther? If it is good for big European business, Germany that was the first to learn this lesson that seems so obvious to

They desire the coming of a day when all business shall be organized as European, rather than as German or French or that of any other nationality, and when all tariffs shall be European. Indeed, the influence of big business has been so evident in backing the Pan-European movement that some groups, especially of radicals, have opposed it for that reason. They see in it, not so much a method of transcending and finally wiping out ancient political and economic divia clear idea of the sort of arrangesions, as a method of bringing the whole consuming portion of the con-tinent's population into the power of great international price-fixing combines. Spring-Rice Memoirs

Another matter, less important per haps, has appeared of interest in the United States. The memoirs of Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, who was Ambas-sador to the United States during the early years of the war, have just been prominent political figures in our country, He was an impassioned ad-mirer of Theodore Roosevelt and Henry Cabot Lodge, which may account for his antipathy to President Wilson and some of the latter's en-tourage. In 1917, about the second month o America's entry into the war, I returned from Europe on the same ship with Sir Cecil Spring-Rice and

M. Jusserand, the French Ambassa dor, who were hastening back to their Washington posts. Two more aloof and seemingly disheartened diplo-mats it was hard to imagine. They were traveling incognito, and but few of the thousand or more Americans fleeing homeward from the war recognized them. But to those who did, they were reticent, noncommittal, not even hopeful.

The Frenchman did in time come to understand the American people and made for himself a great place at Washington, Spring-Rice, however failed. N. Y. UNIVERSITY TEAM UNDER WAY

Scores Impressive Win Over Vermont-Sophomores to Fill Positions

NEW YORK—With the three outstanding backs of 1928, as well as the star end and tackle, lost by graduation, the problem of the football coach of New York University to turn out a team that would compare with that allof New York University to turn out a team that would compare with that all-star aggregation for this season, ap-peared well nigh hopeless. Kenneth Strong, and Edward Hill, with Arthur Roberts only a trifle less important, had been the chief reliance for running and passing, while Robert Barrabee, as receiver of passes, and Albert Lassar receiver of passes, and Albert Lass-man, at tackle on the other side of the line, were of equal importance on at-line, were of equal importance on attack and defense.

But John F. Meehan, who had been so successful in developing those stars, set to work to find their successors, and judging from the opening game of the new eleven last week, when the team overwhelmed the University of Vermont by a score of 77 to 0, he has succeeded. Calling Lassmand Roberts to aid him, while Strong, versity of Vermont by a score of 77 to 0, he has succeeded. Calling Lassman and Roberts to aid him, while Strong, who turned professional was also available on occasions, he developed from the second-string men of 1928, with a considerable influgiof talent from the undefeated freshiman eleven of last season, a group of players who are no wit inferior to the last-year aggregation at the start of the season, and are likely to equal it all the way through. A group of players who learned their football in New England schools is the nucleus on which Meehan is making his reconstruction. Capt. Leonard Grant '30 of Dedham High School, Mass.; Beryl Follet '30 of Worcester Academy; H. D. Hormel '30 of Medford High School, Mass., and George Sargisson '31, another Worcester Academy player, are all taking their places this season with great performance in practice and in the first game. Grant and Sargisson, at tackle and guard, are towers of strength on the left side of the line while the game, Grant and Sarjasson, at tacking and guard, are towers of strength on the left side of the line, while the other pair did most of the backfield work against Vermont, with Follet accounting for 34 of the points with his runs and kicking, while Hormel and the strength of the points with the periods gaverned long runs that the periods hade several long runs that helped ward other touchdowns. Dear Editor:

I thought perhaps someone would like to know a few things about our little island, Barbados, so I am writing something about it. Barbados is the most easterly of the West Indian Islands, and is of coral formation. It has 11 parishes and five towns. We have Harrison College for boys, Queen's College for girls (at which I am a student), many second grade schools and elementary schools, and our famous old Codrington College and a high school. Considering the size of Barbados, 21 by 14 miles, our colleges and schools show how much education means to the Barbadian. We have many beauty spots, and our sea bathing cannot be beaten any-where. On the map we look like a tiny dot, but this does not mean we are too small for big things.

This has proved one of the greatest benefits of the League or-ganization. But the United States does not belong to the League, and its leading politicians are therefore debarred from this privilege. It is for this reason, amongst others, that the visit of Great Britain's Prime Minister is an event of such importance and interest.

OTHING could be much more pathetic than an orphan in the desert. This applies to animal bables as well as human. Such was the fate of our little colt, Bill, left an orphan soon after he was born. Indians fed him for awhile, but how he survived on the scant rations an Indian family can spare is a mystery. When he found his way to our store, he was only a few months old and was such a friendly baby we all petted him and he immediately adopted us. Every day he came for his apples or breadcrusts, which were given to him cut up, as his teeth could not manage them yet.

Much could be written about this mercy of kind-hearted humans, but I am wondering who is really deadopted us. Every day he came for his apples or breadcrusts, which were given to him cut up, as his teeth could not manage them yet.

The apparatus is an invention of the explorer's father, Capt. Charles Williamson, and holds three persons comfortably. It is equipped, moreover, with electric lights and connected by a telephone with the ship above. It is not registered that Sylvia evinced surprise at all this, an explorer's daughter being naturally accustomed no doubt to strange adventures.

The Link Between the Home and the School

GENERATION of quick-witted children has been A brought up on The Book of Knowledge. They will tell you how they love it, and their teachers will tell you that these are the children who rank high in their school work and life work. The Book of Knowledge has a three-fold power-it attracts the eye, stimulates the mind and appeals to the heart. Something interesting has happened to the child who hides a volume under his pillow. That child has found the key which unlocks the doors of knowledge. He will never forget what he has learned from the delightful "conversations" and fascinating pictured pages of this wonderful work.

An Original Discovery

What does it mean to educate a child? It certainly does not mean to fill his mind with disjointed bits of information listed under A, B, and C, but rather to give him that all-round grasp of subjects and ideas which is the most important factor in any education worthy of the name. Knowing all the facts in the Almanac does not make an educated person. Do vou know how to make use of those facts and how they are related to other facts on the same subject? That is the unique discovery of The Book of Knowledge. It shows the children how to educate themselves.

The Right Start in the Home

When the child is given a subject to look up at school, very often he has not enough information to enable him to do this successfully. Many of the child's hardest struggles may be avoided with The Book of Knowledge in the home. The reading of these fascinating volumes for even fifteen minutes a day gives him a store of information on a large number of important subjects, and the complete index shows him how to find out for himself quickly what he needs to know. It makes the child's work easier and happier, and shortens the period of school life.

STOCKS PURSUE VERY ERRATIC PRICE COURSE

Unsettlement Due in Part to Unsatisfactory Credit Situation

NEW YORK (P)—Renewal of selling pressure in today's stock market, inspired by the tremendous increase in stock exchange member loans last month, carried U. S. Steel common and many other industrial, public utility and railroad issues to new low levels on the current decline.

Losses in most of the active issues inged from 2 to nearly 10 points, ith Commercial Solvents breaking down side. Several efforts were made to rally the general list, but offerings invaria-bly increased as prices rose, and the attempts were abandoned. Except for the huge gain in loans, which aroused widespread uneasiness, in view of the recent criticism of of-ficials of the American Rankers' As icials of the American Bankers' Asociation and others against the vol-sociation and others against the volume of security borrowings, there was nothing in the day's news to explain the further liquidation.

As in most recent sessions, the volas in most recent sessions, the volume of trading was only moderately heavy, indicating the absence of any extensive forced liquidation. Many traders stoll hold to the theory that the current decline will not culminate until the volume of trading reaches record-breaking proportions on the down side.

Call money renewed at 7½, dropped to 7 and thence to 6, the lowest rate in about a month, but the time money market continued firm at 9 to 9½ per cent. Sears Roebuck reported September sales were nearly $7,000,000 above the like month last year. Baldwin Locomotive stockholders approved the recapitalization plan, and the corporation's unfilled orders were given as on's unfilled orders were given as

U. S. Steel common, which sold as high as 226 yesterday and closed at 223. broke to 218½. General Motors sank nearly 2 points to another new low level for the year at 64¾. General Electric dropped 8¾ points, and Radio sold down more than 3 points.

A. M. Byers, Burroughs Adding Machine, American & Foreign Power, American Water Works, Johns-Man-ville, Montgomery Ward, New York Central, Allied Chemical and Air Re-

Central, Allied Chemical and Air Reduction crumbled 5 to 7 points, while Atchison, Canadian Pacific, American Telephone, Westinghouse Electric, Sears Roebuck, du Pont and American Can sold down 3 to 4 points, Columbian Carbon was an outstanding strong spot, climbing 13½ points to a new high record at 309, Texas & Pacific and Warren Bros. also showed independent strength.

High-priced shares led the downward turn in the last hour. Auburn Auto was off 21½, Commercial Solvents 30, Allied Chemical 12 and American & Foreign Power 10¼.

vents 30, Allied Chemical 12 and American & Foreign Power 10½.
Columbian Carbon, which had advanced 15½ to the new peak of 311, slumped to 220. Midland Steel Products preferred lost a 14¾-point gain. United States Steel got as low as 217¾, and General Motors sagged to 64¾. The closing was weak. Sales approximated 4,200,000 shares.

Bonds Irregular Irregular fluctuations of small pro-portions characterized the early trad-ing in bonds today. Only part of yesterday's nominal improvement was maintained by standard issues, while the convertibles and other bonds with stock features moved unevenly, show-ing small changes, Trading was very

American Telephone 4½s and the International Telephone convertibles showed a degree of steadiconvertibles showed a degree of steadiconvertibles showed a degree of steadiness.

Investment rails were extremely inactive, and neither the utilities nor the industrials fared much better. Even issues with speculative possibilities failed to draw a following. Seaboard All Florida 6s, which made a new high yesterday, yielded their three-point gain.

Dominion of Canada 5s. 1952, touched the new minimum of 1004 on a minor sale, and Hungary Municipal 7s sold off nearly 3 points to a new low. The foreign list, as a whole, was low. The foreign list, as a whole, was rather unsettled.

Little activity developed in United States Government obligations, and prices were steady.

One Minute Biographies.

Who: VICTOR HUGO.

Where: France. When: Nineteenth century.

Why famous: Probably the greatest

Trench poet of his age; a dramatist, tovelist, essayist and politician. For the principal part of a century the leading literary figure of France.

It is usually held that Hugo's stir-ring childhood had a lasting effect upon his artistic career. For his father, who had espoused the cause of Joseph Bonaparte, experienced the sharp vicissitudes common in the Napoleonic era. In the train of that monarch the Hugo family went to Naples, then to Madrid; impressions of the Alps and of Italy, more vividly impressions of Spain, clung to the young son. Privileges, honors, titles were heaped upon the father until the position of the French in Madrid became so precarious that the mother and child were sent hastily back to Paris. There the boy attended the Pension Cordier, where he read voraciously and began to write as well. At the age of 14 he is said to have declared that he would "be Chateaubriand or nothing." For some years thereafter he was something of an infant prodigy; his writings accumu-lated, he won prizes and distinctions everywhere. At the age of 20 his first volume of poems appeared and sold 1500 copies in the first four months, in consequence of which Hugo received a pension from the privy purse which enabled him to marry With the success of "Hernani" he achieved popular fame and fortune.

Peggy Pink Prinks

THE garden was gay and lovely in the bright morning sunlight.

A new, sweet, spicy perfume filled the air, causing the flowers to prick up their heads and look about.

"Never proud, perverse, pompous, plain, nor priggish."

"Always patient and pacific," laughed Lucy.

A Hurried Traveler

THE undertaking by Hermann Keyserling in the current Atlantic Monthly to characterize various centers of the United States as to the quality and extent of their culture is no task for a timid person. One can but admire both the Count's temerity and the extraordinary agility of his analytical processes. To hunt down and label the various "genius loci" of New York and San Francisco, of Virginia and Boston, of Minnesota and New Orleans, of Chicago and Los Angeles, in terms satisfactory to the denizens of these localities, would require a much longer sojourn than a few weeks, and keener insight into human nature than is possessed by even this versatile philosopher.

That the only really cultured atmosphere found in America today is that of Virginia recalls Dickens's statement that the purest English he found in America was in the Old Dominion. This may please the F. F. V.'s, if not the people of Denver and New Orleans or of Boston; but that he should omit any mention of New Haven, Cambridge, Princeton and other ancient seats of learning raises the question as to the type of culture he was seeking. Was it culture which results from refinement of the senses through moral and spiritual influences, or was it the culture which, while refining the human appetites, yet takes no cognizance of what Paul called the things which although eternal yet are not seen? Readers of the article can scarcely fail to conclude that it is the latter point of view which the writer has adopted.

Of the traditional superiority of the culinary art of New Orleans, he makes much. He says, "Owing to that tradition, even Americanism acquires a halo of beauty in New Orleans.' Manifestly, he considers a cultivated and discriminating appreciation of food of more cultural value than education in the usual sense; and with the gentle art of eating, the Count closely associates the art of refined drinking. So high is placed the educated taste which enables one to discriminate between the vintages of wine that the author is constrained to say that the basis of Greek, Chinese and French culture-and in this category he would include all cultures-"was the sense for the quality of food and drink these nations possessed or

Many there are who would found the superiority of these great races on a far higher plane. While the old saying that the way to one's heart is through his stomach may possess a modicum of truth, yet to trace the elevation of the race—for that is the beginning and end of culture—upon so purely physical a basis as appetite and its gratification is to lose sight completely of the great moral and spiritual values, the eternal forces, which operating in human consciousness, have elevated the race far above its lowly beginnings.

Valid exception can be taken to many of the characterizations which are primal to the great centers of the country. The, to him, unreal atmosphere of Los Angeles; the singularity of San Francisco; the utter absence of Anglo-Saxonism in Chicago; the dying culture of New England, all suggest a lack of depth of understanding which can be gained only by those who remain in a locality long enough to dig beneath the surface. Like many another hasty traveler, Count Keysefling draws erroneous conclusions from hurried glimpses of different sections of the country, conclusions which would very generally be reversed if he really grasped the underlying situations.

When October Comes

HOWEVER much one may seek to persuade himself that he is able to discover perfection and satisfying beauty in every recurring season, there comes, inevitably, to one whose habitat is somewhere in northern areas of the temperate zone, the conviction that October, of all the months, is richest in its completeness. A little journey in any direction away from the busy scenes of the city leads to where the alluring and almost endless panorama in color and shade unfolds in profligate richness and beauty. There comes, as one views its borders, even, the realization that here are evidences that what had been undertaken in the zeal of a new season has been finished to the satisfaction of a master artist. In fancy there is seen the limitless setting of a majestic studio in which a million persons stand in speechless admiration of the artist's

Almost in a day or in a night the vast panorama has been spread from hill to valley and from valley to mountain side. Yesterday, where the browns and yellows and flaming reds are seen in profusion, shadings of green prevailed everywhere. Jack Frost must have traveled fast between sunset and dawn. His route is one with which he has long been familiar. Descendant and emissary of the Ice King, he seems always to have been able to adapt to his own uses some device more swift than the modern

But he is a friendly and a welcome seasonal invader. As he passes he exposes not alone the beauties of the painted groves and forests, but the yellowing pumpkins, the golden russets upon the burdened limbs, and the half-forgotten pathway that leads from the hedgerow beyond the creek to a sun-warmed hillside red with thorn-apples and dark with ripened haws.

Wild ducks rise from a pond formed by a bend in the river near a dilapidated flour mill, and in imagination the boy of a somewhat earlier period hears again the once familiar language of prairie fowl breakfasting at a friendly corn shock. Lowing yearlings belonging to a neighboring herd graze contentedly, evidently forgetful of the fact that it is not always summer.

Though the farmer has garnered the bulk of his crops, the harvest season evidently is not ended. Deep in the woods the little furry tribes are busy with their harvest. Nut trees are yielding their bounty ungrudgingly. In a more secluded spot known only to the inquisitive, a beaver colony is setting its village in order, repairing its dam and carrying to storage necessary food for winter.

Not until the lengthening shadows of the afternoon warn the wayfarer does he realize that his explorations have led him far afield. A deliberate detour through a thicket, along a stony hillside and across a fenceless field brings him soon to a paved highway and back to what careless folks call civilization. A meandering accommodation train justifies its title by halting fong enough at a flag station to permit itself to be boarded for the homeward journey. Viewed from the small windows of the car the sun sets in magnified splendor beyond the rim of a mountain garlanded in all the colors of the rainbow amplified and reflected in innumerable magnificent facets and prisms.

Musical Hospitality

AIR hearing must be given to composers of minor rank, according to the obvious view of the committee directing the chamber music festival at the Library of Congress, Washington. Opportunity to address some portion of the public ought to be granted to those who write in the hope of reputation, as well as to those who write, or have written, in assurance of it. Encouragement to the unknown or half-known aspirant seems, indeed, to be the purpose of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge prize contest, which has been held every other year since 1918, in connection first with the Berkshire chamber music festival at Pittsfield, Mass., and latterly with the Washington meetings. For in the case of nearly all the winners of the prize thus far, the question could be asked, without critical cruelty, Who are they? And the answer would have to be, that they are minor composers. Nevertheless, people who attend the concerts find delight in a prize-winning work, especially if it occupies a position not too obtrusive and pretentious in the general scheme of programs.

Now, if a festival audience can be hospitable to composers who are striving to gain a place as spokesmen of the times, any group of listeners assuredly can. Nobody cares to be bored, of course, by uninteresting artistic efforts, particularly a person who goes to but an occasional musical performance, and who desires to be repaid for his trouble and attention when he does go to one. And yet, a concert or an opera presentation, thought of as a mere article of purchase and regarded as something bought over the counter from a manager or an impresario, will only with much internal and external persuasion prove of value.

The French may be considered to have discovered the right way. They listen to a minor composer, like Franck, to awake one morning to find him major. On the other hand, they listen to a major composer, like Saint-Saëns, to learn, alas! that he is perhaps only minor. They endure Debussy from obscurity to illustriousness. Keeping right on, they refuse not Ravel and Milhaud; and they even admit the stranger from Brazil and from the United States.

In regard to masters, both older and more recent, of the German school, Bach for a hundred years was minor, if not of the very least. Beethoven stands, apparently, major first, last and always. Wagner for a long time was minor; and Mahler, internationally speaking, still is. To generalize on the subject, it can almost be set down that composing is the minor part of composition, and that the major part in the great making of music is listening.

To Pienie or Not to Pienie

TWO classes of persons, during the warm months of the year, are the recipients of a great deal of unsolicited pity. The one class consists of those who go picnicking; the other of those who do not. And the pity of the one for the other is most pitiful indeed, since it appears to be entirely wasted in both cases.

"Sorry for me!" exclaims the picnicker to the nonpicnicker, packing his bulging hamper on the running board of his car. "Why, you don't know what fun is! Better come along and get some of the kinks out of your disposition!"

"Sorry for me!" exclaims the nonpicnicker to the picnicker, running through his road guide to locate a good hotel as the objective for his day's tour. "Why, you don't know what comfort is! Better forget that hamper and come along and dine in peace!"

"No, thanks! I'm off for the shady dell and the grassgrown slopes," says the picnicker.
"Yes," adds the nonpicnicker, "and the mosquitoes, the spiders, the ants, gnats, black flies, quitoes, the spiders, the ants, gnats, black flies, beetles, grass stains, torn socks, and general discomfort! You're welcome to 'em. I'm off for a nice, easy drive, dining-room service and screened windows."

"Yes," responds the picnicker, "and the rattle of dishes, the smell of soup, gas, grease, radio jazz, rubbing elbows, rustling papers, dollar tips, and never the song of a bird! You're welcome to 'em. Good-by."

And so they part and go their respective ways, each pitying the other—each satisfied with himself.

The picnicker reaches his sylvan glade, unpacks his hamper, and he and his friends deploy on the grass, blissfully oblivious to insects or inconveniences. The sun, pouring down its gentle warmth; the rivulet, purling along its pebbly course; the forest, murmuring its interminable assurance of comradeship; the birds caroling and the little creatures chirping and chattering over their divers affairs of domesticity—all join in a conspiracy to so fill the picnicker's thought with gratitude that he returns to his home rejoicing.

The nonpicnicker and his friends likewise reach a dinner-time destination and deploy about the table—

But here a picnicking editorial writer must in fairness pause. Mindful of the broad and tolerant attitude which he should at all times maintain toward both sides of a subject, something cautions him to forbear interpreting what he cannot understand. He feels that there is something to be said—something that should be said—for the nonpicnicker. But he does not feel competent to say it. At any rate, it does seem that each of the two camps—the Right and the Left wing of the motor trippers, so to speak—would do well to stop wasting pity and make the best of its own kind of entertainment.

Sudbury Honors Dawes

EVEN the plainest man could not fail to be eloquent before an audience such as that which greeted Gen. Charles G. Dawes, United States Ambassador to Great Britain, when he had the dignity of honorary freeman conferred upon him by the ancient town of Sudbury, in England, the town from which his ancestors migrated 300 years ago. It was a warmhearted audience, hospitable, proud of its association with the distinguished American who had so completely and successfully carried the Anglo-American naval conversations through their preliminary stages, and bent upon making the occasion one that should not soon be forgotten.

Nor was General Dawes less proud of Sudbury. "No one could have picked a better ancestor for an American family than a Puritan stonemason from Sudbury, a builder not a destroyer, a constructor not a critic, also a man who did not run with the crowd." In these words he paid tribute to the old English stock from which he sprang, the people whose character has made such a deep imprint upon succeeding generations.

By a gracious compliment he bridged three centuries, centuries that have seen the vast, empty spaces of the West peopled to a large extent by the Anglo-Saxon race, and brought to a high state of perfection by their genius. Time has wrought changes and has brought Great Britain and the United States closer in friendship and mutual understanding.

For a big share in the development of this understanding, no little credit should go to General Dawes himself.

What Next in Branch Banking?

MOST important discussion from the point of view of the future of American banking is now in progress at the annual convention of the American Bankers' Association in San Francisco, where the whole problem of branch banking is being debated. The outcome will be worth noting, because it will indicate the progress which has been made during the last few years by branch banking interests.

In the past the association has gone on record as strongly opposed to the extension of branch banking in the United States. This has not been the position of all the members in attendance, but rather has resulted from the preponderant vote of small country bankers, who have been almost unanimously against it. Within the last year or two, however, considerable progress has doubtless been made in convincing bankers in the outlying districts that at least a limited form of branch banking would be desirable.

The basis of the objection of country bankers is not difficult to understand. To them branch banking means more and more competition. Of course, they emphasize other points, such as the great desirability of having a banker know intimately the affairs of his clients, the disadvantage of having to await the approval of a head office before making a loan, etc., but at bottom there is usually a real apprehension of being either driven out of business or swallowed up by the larger organizations.

Actually, there is a very tangible basis for such alarm. The rate at which bank mergers have been taking place during the last eight years makes one wonder where they will stop. Scarcely a week passes but announcement is made of from two to a score or more mergers. In addition, there are perhaps almost as many more of which the public hears nothing. The latter for the most part consist of the purchase of control by outside organizations. Institutions which are so bought continue to operate without visible evidence of the change of ownership. One "chain" is said to consist of banks numbering in the hundreds.

To a substantial extent both the invisible and the visible mergers have been in anticipation of a modification of the laws in a manner which will permit nation-wide branch banking. Some people are of the opinion that such a change will come within a year. This, however, is far from likely. Nation-wide branch banking is probably inevitable, but it will come gradually. State-wide branch banking is almost unknown outside of California, and only a little more than half of the states permit branch banking in any form. The next step, therefore, is still a local one. The very most that may be expected from the bankers' association at the present time is to favor, as a group, branch banking within Federal Reserve districts.

Editorial Notes

At Cibiens, France, is an agricultural school set in 500 picturesque acres, with a towered château and beautiful lawns, the idea being to impede the steady flow of youth from farm to city by presenting agriculture attractively. A modicum of this beautifying and modernizing effort expended on individual farms—in France or America—would, in many cases, probably give the boys and girls so much pleasure and happiness as to erase from their thoughts all consideration of leaving the farm home to live in "town."

"Buechsenschuss to Kazmerchak" sounds startling, but it would simply be a forward pass between two Ohio State varsity football players this fall. Well, football in the United States may be overemphasized, but it must be admitted that it is cosmopolitan so far as the players who make the big college teams are concerned.

"Baby takes naps in diving bell while Dad explores ocean floor," reads headline. But what most persons will wonder is, how Dad ever got the baby away from Mother for the adventure.

South American West Coast Wanderings

Callao, Peru

Hould you find yourself in any of the smaller ports on the South American west coast and in a quandary as to the best means of reaching the next one, the chances are about three to one that a German semicargo boat will solve your problem. For so rapidly have the Germans restored their South American trade, especially on this coast, during the past decade that this is about the proportion in which German freighters outnumber all the rest. They touch the little sun-drenched, heat-baked ports from the Isthmus to the Straits; towns straggling over sand dunes where it has not rained for a long time and probably will not for a longer; where there is little or no vegetation and not much paint on the buildings;
where the Chinese own all the shops and mingle as harmoniously with the natives as they do in the South Seas.

The resear for existence of much as these small; "West

The reason for existence of such as these small "West Coast" ports is their connection by railway with the rich interior, with the sugar plantations and cotton fields and mines and oil deposits. They have no harbors, and the far-roving freighter sometimes finds it necessary to linger well offshore for a week or ten days until a turbulent sea subsides sufficiently to permit lighters to traverse the mile or more from the beach to deep water.

Thus the journey from Panama to Guayaquil may require two or three weeks, and from there on to Callao even more. But the "West Coast" wanderer must be prepared for all that. He must be well fortified with patience, as well as with that keen interest in the activities of mankind wherever encountered, which is proof against boredom and assurance of adaptability to any environment.

I had been haunting the steamship office and consulates in Guayaquil for a fortnight in the endeavor to discover some way to reach Callao, by way of how many other places I was not in the least concerned. It is a familiar quest to me, followed in half the ports of the Seven Seas through a considerable number of years. I have learned to be patient, reasonable and tactful—above all, tactful, which is only another way of saying polite.

I have found it profitable to request rather than to demand, even sometimes to plead if the exigency seems to require it. Here along the "Malecon," in the rejuvenated and thoroughly renovated town of Guayaquil, I discussed the matter leisurely with an Englishman, a Scotsman, a Hollander, an American-educated Ecuadorean, and a few of less determinate extraction.

The discussions, conducted sometimes in the cool, dark interior of warehouses, and sometimes at café tables under broad sidewalk awnings, concerned themselves with nothing very definite for some time. It was uncertain when a steamer would arrive. One was due to leave Panama on a specific date, but might not. Perhaps tomorrow something would be learned. Next week a British tramp was expected. It was possible that her captain might be persuaded to accept an easily satisfied passenger.

So it went. The situation would, perhaps, have been trying to one anxious to "hustle" from Guayaquil to Callao, or to somewhere else. But inasmuch as contentment—and capacity for achievement—consists largely in harmony with environment, the wanderer, especially on the "West Coast," would be neither content nor productive did he exercise himself about such trifles as waiting a week or two for a steamer. Hence, following the hours spent in amiable warehouse or sidewalk chats about the possibility of getting from here to somewhere else, I withdrew leisurely to my hotel room and there renewed acquaintance with my "Corona," a rarely failing method of diverting myself from the problems of the moment.

The English steamer, upon which I had hoped by and by to embark for Callao, seemed to have disappeared altogether from the ken of man. She had left Colon, but a fortnight passed and nothing further was heard of her. And so, presently, when a neat-looking German semi-freighter anchored one sunny morning off the Malecon, I immediately sought the local Hamburg-American representative.

There was room enough, it appeared, and indeed when I went aboard late that afternoon, having satisfied the meticulous port officials that I was as much entitled to depart from Ecuador as I had been to enter, I was led from one room to another by a gracious steward and Old World.

offered my choice of them all. And if, having tried one, I didn't like it, I could try another. That is the way on German ships, and it is one reason why German maritime trade all over the world has been revived so rapidly. Service and courtesy, and then more service and more courtesy!

No less than eight ports were made by this far-wandering vessel on the 800- or 900-mile run from Guayaquil to Callao. The weather was propitious, and it was possible to go ashore as much as one wished. But the rainless ports of the Persian Gulf offer hardly less variety than these towns of the "West Coast." In fact, there is much similarity. Sandy, sun-baked beaches, paint-denuded buildings, scant vegetation, fleckless skies, blue water, unhurried life, detachment from the world of activity and endeavor, each is characteristic of Salaverry and of Bushire, of Chimbote, and of Bunder Abbas.

On the "West Coast," as in the Persian Gulf, to see one port is to see them all. There is, in effect, but one difference, and that is the presence, here in South America, of the Chinese. Why the men of Canton and Amoy and Swatow should ever select this arid region in which to establish their little shops when such as Tahiti and Fiji and Jamaica are open to them, is one of the inexplicable mysteries of the Oriental character. But here they are, and every retail store in every port from Guayaquil to Callao is theirs. Guayaquil itself contains thousands of Chinese, and Callao nearly as many.

The far-roaming "tramp" of the seas usually reaches its destination at daylight. And the vast sweep of Callao harbor is enshrouded in its usual morning mist as we pick a careful way within and to the anchorage in the shelter of the great breakwater. Callao, storied port of the old "windjammer" days, when a score of clippers could be seen at anchor there at any time, is one of the wanderer's objectives.

Whether pronounced as spelled or, correctly, "Kay—ow," it is a name that, like Singapore and Shanghai, Honolulu and Hong Kong, Buenos Aires and Bombay, Freemantle and Frisco, has been ever before him. It has an "atmosphere" still, nor has modernity, North American "hustle," or the passing of the ships of sail, altogether dissipated that atmosphere. Indeed, through the slowly lifting mist we see here and there the masts of barks and barkentines and many-sparred schooners, looming dim and shadowy like ghosts of the past. They are all that is left of the old days, "windjammers" not inappropriately finding their final port here, "laid up" in the harbor of Callao.

And yet, somewhat as in other instances throughout the world, Callao's chief importance today is its proximity to another place, to Lima, the city beautiful of the "West Coast." By train, tramear, or swift omnibus over roads like those of California, one speeds to the fair Peruvian capital in a few minutes. With my anticipations of Peruvian courtesy consider bly enlivened by the favor which I had received at the hands of the Peruvian Consul in Guayaquil, who had given me what he called a "courtesy visé," I rode into Lima, traversing a splendid broad, treelined boulevard, which terminated before a "Gran" hotel declared to be the best on this side of the Continent. No doubt it is, and all of the capital is in proportion.

American resources and enterprise have developed Lima, as all the rest of Peru, to an extent almost incredible. The city is a European community set down here on the other side of the world. It has the elements of the cities of the Old World, much of their cosmopolitanism, and not a little of their atmosphere. Its vast cathedral and the surrounding plaza are of the old Spanish days, but the streets that lead in every direction are full of continental shops owned by French and Italians and Germans, of Spanish and Swiss cafés—and American motorcars.

Beyond are the broad, residential boulevards, fine as those of Paris and Berlin and Vienna; and about another plaza are some of the splendid recently erected government buildings. Activity, energy and industry are everywhere, for Lima blends the modern, as copied from North America, with the old, as lingering from the Spanish days. It is, indeed, a remarkable combination, this "West Coast" capital which, as it is today, is of so recent a growth. It is a mingling of the old and new, of America and of Europe, of Spain in the West and Spain in the Old World.

This Machine Age and Individualism

THIS is the age of big corporations, merged business and gigantic industrial enterprises.

Some quite intelligent folks have told us that the individual no longer amounts to much; that he is simply a cog in the huge machine of modern industry. They hark back to the good old days when they say there was more individualism and when each man was his own boss. They tell us that greater opportunities existed then for young men to achieve success through individual efforts.

But are they correct?
Don't they fail to realize that men and women—individuals—are back of our modern giants of industry? These huge enterprises did not just happen to come into existence or grow to their present size. Many of them are the fulfillment of the dreams of individuals—the culmination of their individualism. For after all big organizations are individuals—not machines.

Big business enterprises cannot coast along in machinelike fashion. Business competition today is too keen for that. Individual directing efforts are necessary for progress, and the very size of modern business organizations calls for the most skillful individual efforts in this respect. The modern automobile is an efficient machine, but it doesn't keep on running forever. Individual attention is necessary to keep it operating efficiently, and the same is true of big business.

Many a successful executive of a large enterprise will tell you that the biggest problem of his corporation is manpower. What does he mean? Simply this—that the number of men capable of displaying that individualism necessary to fill prominent executive positions is always less than the demand. Business is constantly on the lookout for promising young men. It is willing to give them every opportunity to display that ability, and if the young man shows over a period of years that he has that individualism necessary to executive success, he will be rewarded far more liberally than in the old days.

Individualism is not only necessary in the more responsible positions of a business, but it pays dividends to the so-called "cogs" in the machine. Consider the large number of prominent business men today who have worked up from the humblest jobs to positions of great responsibility and financial success. It was their individualism—their unwillingness to be just a cog—that made that success pos-

American business of today has expanded so that it offers millions of opportunities to young men to demonstrate their individualism. Just remember that gigantic industrial enterprises are the result of individualism and that they are still made up of individuals.—Longview

'Naval "Betrayal"

In the mass of irresponsible naval chatter that has been inflicted upon a suffering public, there is nothing farther away from any semblance of truth than the parrotlike reiteration of the "betrayal" of the United States at the Washington Disarmament Conference of 1921.

It is true that Lord Riddell has officially denied the existence of anything of the kind. But a statement of facts has made no difference. This imaginary Mrs. Harris continued to be trotted about before our eyes, as if there were any such person. The only way to brush away this apparition, which has not even the standing of a ghost, is to reiterate the truth, which has been stated in this paper, as to the Washington Disarmament Conference of 1921.

to the Washington Disarmament Conference of 1921.

The decisive factor in that conference was a clause inserted in the original text of the building program of 1916, which provided for stopping the construction of warships, if this were made possible by international agreement. Even the most blind partisan must admit that this could not have been inserted by the guile of Great Britain. For

Great Britain could not believe in 1920 that it was operative.

It was a complete surprise for Great Britain, as well as for the whole world, when the United States proved that it was was not only operative but a pledge for peace and good will. At the very first session of the conference our Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, read a statement that the United States voluntarily abdicated an assured naval superiority and put its battle fleet on an equality with that Great Britain. Where was the insidious influence of Great Britain, as described today?....

This act of the United States was voluntary, uninfluenced by other nations and by ulterior motives. It is wrong to hold up petty inch-rule standards to measure this abdication of an armed superiority without asking for gain. Its influence changed public opinion throughout the world. It gave the United States the standing that made possible the peace pact—and its influence is moving forward today in the path of peace and good will. Let us keep this in mind, and pay no attention to what is not even noise.—Capt. Thomas G. Frothingham, in the Boston

Prohibition—Insurance

PROHIBITION, with its enforcement, is of particular interest to the insurance world, as it affects life, fire, casualty and liability insurance in all forms. Those engaged in underwriting and premium production are peculiarly in position to judge the practical as against the political effect of prohibition.

Since the passage of the law there has been an enormous increase in all insurance. And there has been great increase in other activities. The law was enacted after the inflation of the dollar had reached its height, so that inflation does not apparently account for the increase. If that is a fact, where has the increased business come from? Is it from the savings on the saloon and private drink bills that previously ran into many billions a year? Those billions have gone into many avenues of business, why not into insurance?

There is scarcely any doubt that the decrease of general drunkenness has had its effect on insurance. Fire insurance rates have decreased more than 17 per cent since 1918. Life insurance dividends to policyholders have sharply increased. In casualty and liability lines we may imagine what would have happened in automobiling and in factory mechanics if the old freedom to drink at every corner, and as often as one wanted, were now in vogue. These are matters that insurance people have to consider as a business matter from their experience, wholly apart from the theories of government they may entertain. It may result in a collision or a harmony. That is for every voter to decide for himself.—The Insurance Field.

Holiday Camps

THE Society of Friends has done an admirable service in running a large holiday camp in South Wales for young men who are unemployed. One of the most distressing elements in the problem of unemployment in the mining areas is the hopeless outlook of young men who have never had a day's work since they left school. The surprising thing is not that some of them go to the dogs, but that so many keep their self-respect. There is nothing like the disciplined open-air life of country or seaside camps, such as may be seen at this time of the year in almost any part of Great Britain, for renewing the pride of youth and its belief in the future. After an experience of this kind a young man is far more likely to train himself for work, to seek for it and to get it. The experiment has been so successful that we hope it will be extended—this year and the next—and that the example set by the Friends will stimulate other bodies to share in the good work.—Daily News and Westminster Gazette (London),
